1. Gramatika

Verbs (glagoli)

Most verbs in Bosnian, Croatian, and Serbian change (conjugate) according to one of three patterns — that is, there are three types of endings that can be added to the verb stem. This table shows three verbs with different conjugation types: the -a conjugation, the -i conjugation, and the -e conjugation, respectively.

-a conjugation		i-conjugation		e-conjugation
Imati, imam (to have)		Vidjeti/videti, vidim (to see)		Piti, pijem (to drink)
Ja im- am	Mi im- amo	Ja vid- im	Mi vid- imo	Ja pij- em	Mi pij- emo
Ti im- aš	Vi im- ate	Ti vid- iš	Vi vid- ite	Ti pij- eš	Vi pij- ete
On, ona, ono im- a	Oni, one, ona im- aju	On, ona, ono vid- i	Oni, one, ona vid- e	On, ona, ono pij- e	Oni, one, ona pij- u

1. Vježbamo/Vežbamo Glagoli

Apply the conjugation endings shown in Gramatika 1 to the new verbs below.

Gledati, gledam (to watch)		Raditi, radim (to work, to do)		Pisati, pišem (to write)

2. Gramatika

The accusative case singular

Masculine		Neuter		Feminine
		-∅		-u
Nom.	Acc.	Nom.	Acc.	Nom.	Acc.
film	film	selo	selo	mačka	mačku
telefon	telefon	vino	vino	knjiga	knjigu
Beograd	Beograd	Sarajevo	Sarajevo	voda	vodu

When changing the case of nouns that end in a vowel, always drop that vowel before adding appropriate endings.

In most grammatical cases, the ending depends on the gender of the noun; however, the accusative case in the singular distinguishes between animate and inanimate masculine nouns. For now, we will only be dealing with masculine nouns that are inanimate.

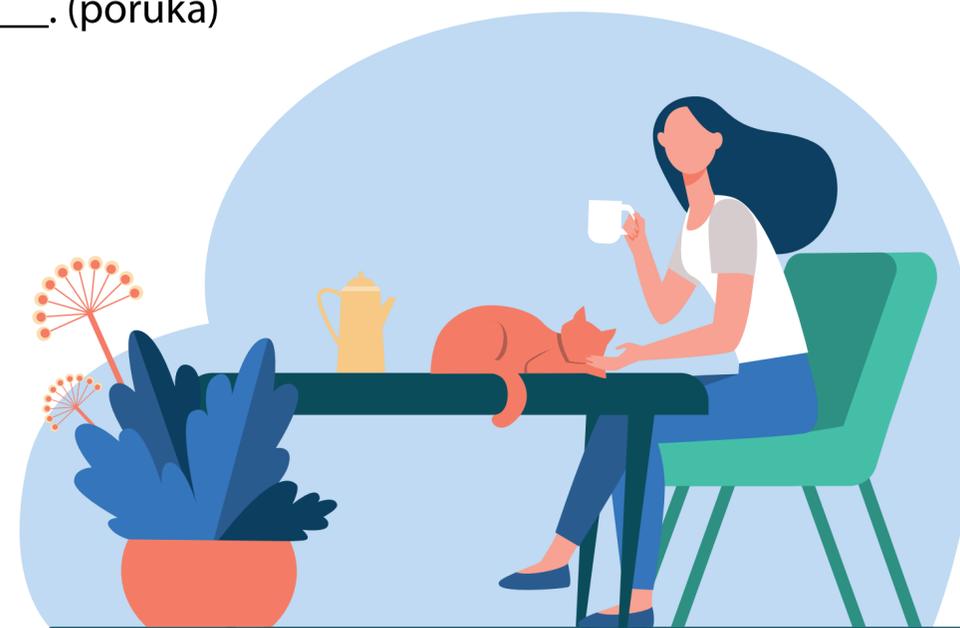

2. Vježbamo/Vježbamo

Accusative

Put the nouns in the following sentences in the accusative case.

1. Marko ima _____. (mačka)
2. Njegova žena vidi _____. (automobil)
3. Lijepa djevojka/ lepa devojka pije _____. (sok)
4. Oni imaju _____. (dijete/dete)
5. Ti piješ _____. (kafa/kava)
6. Naš prijatelj vidi _____. (grad)
7. Moj profesor piše _____. (knjiga)
8. Mi gledamo _____. (film)
9. Ja radim _____. (zadaca/zadatak).
10. Ti pišeš _____. (poruka)

Bitno!Cases (padeži) : nominative (nominativ) and accusative (akuzativ)

Nouns in Bosnian/Croatian/Serbian change their endings depending on their role in a sentence. These different roles are called cases, and the different forms associated with each role are called declensions. BCS has seven distinct cases, and you are already familiar with the first one: the nominative, which is used for naming the grammatical subject of a sentence — that is, for stating what things are, or who is performing an action.

For example, in the following two sentences, the nouns mačka and student are in the nominative case.

Ovo je mačka (This is a cat)

Student pije. (The student is drinking)

However, many verbs require an object of the action. In order to mark the grammatical object, the nominative form of the noun needs to be changed into the accusative case form. In English, the distinction between subject and object is rendered by word order: the subject comes before the verb, and the object comes after. The subject-verb-object word order is the most common in BCS as well, but the existence of cases makes it irrelevant to the relationship.

Examine the following two examples, and note how BCS expresses the same English meaning using two different word orders; but that the case forms that signal the role of the noun in the sentence stay the same regardless of word order, and are entirely dependent on the intended meaning.

Examine the following two examples, and note how Bosnian/Croatian/Serbian expresses the same English meaning using two different word orders. The case forms that signal the role of each noun in the sentence are determined by the intended meaning, and retain their designated form regardless of word order.

The woman sees the cat.

Žena vidi mačku.

Mačku vidi žena.

The cat sees the woman.

Mačka vidi ženu.

Ženu vidi mačka.

3. Vježbamo/Vježbamo*Nominative and accusative singular

Consulting the declension table on previous page, mark the case of the selected noun. Then, write the translation of the sentence.

3. Čovjek ima knjigu. Nom/ Acc _____
4. Čovek pije kafu/kavu. Nom/ Acc _____
5. Vodu pije žena. Nom/ Acc _____
6. Milicu vidi Marko. Nom/ Acc _____
7. Marko vidi Milicu. Nom/ Acc _____
8. Milica ima čas/sat. Nom/ Acc _____
9. Čas/sat ima profesorica/profesorka. Nom/ Acc _____
10. Žena ima dijete/dete. Nom/ Acc _____

3. Gramatika

Questions with verbs other than biti (to be)

Just like with biti, there are two ways to ask questions with all other verbs. All three standards can form questions by placing the verb in the beginning, and following it with the word li before.

Je li ovo Marko? = Is this Marko?

Ima li Marko knjigu? = Does Marko have a book?

Bosnian and Serbian may also form questions by using the phrase da li. In this case, da li precedes what would otherwise be a declarative sentence.

Marko ima knjigu. = Marko has a book.

Da li Marko ima knjigu? = Does Marko have a book?

Bitno!

Regular and irregular verb negation

Biti, imati: negation

biti (to be)		imati (to have)
nisam	nismo	nemam	nemamo
nisi	niste	nemaš	nemate
nije	nisu	nema	nemaju

Most verbs are negated by inserting the negation word ne immediately before the verb.

Pavle ne vidi Mariju. = Pavle doesn't see Marija.

Marko ne pije vodu. = Marko isn't drinking water.

We have also seen two exceptions to this rule: the verbs biti and imati, which have irregular negation forms of their own.

Lucija nije tužna. = Lucija isn't sad.

Pavle nema knjigu. = Pavle doesn't have a book.
